

Galen Druke is the host and producer of the FiveThirtyEight Politics podcast, which aims to explain politics through a mix of data analysis and traditional reporting. He has covered elections at ABC News's FiveThirtyEight since 2015, where he also reported the "The Gerrymandering Project" and "The Primaries Project" — long form series looking at how primaries and redistricting work in America.

Before FiveThirtyEight, he helped create a daily news magazine show on Wisconsin Public Radio, covering regional news and politics. In addition, his work has been heard on NPR, WNYC, On The Media, CBC, and the University of Cambridge's ELECTION. He graduated from The Johns Hopkins University and lives in New York City.